

Here is the news: We are still facing glass ceilings

SKY News presenter Juliette Foster told the audience women had to keep pushing up the glass ceilings in order to achieve.

She also said women should stay ambitious and make sure they fulfilled their dreams.

She said: "It is through the ambition of one group of people that women can now vote, and it is through the ambition of another group of people that women can control their own money and have the right to their own education.

"Once upon a time, women who got married became the property of their husbands and it is through people's ambition that this has changed.

"My parents had to fight against prejudice and they did that because they knew that, morally, it was right and, more importantly, that if they did not it would affect their children and could push them to the bottom of the pile.

"It is going to be difficult because there are a lot of glass ceilings but, despite that, women are trying to smash them down

"One of the things my mother first told me was that there is room in the world for everyone. You should not give up on a dream."
